

Syrian Refugee Crisis and Resettlement

A Statement from the International Institute of St. Louis

There have been horrific terrorist attacks by ISIS abroad in the past few days, namely in Beirut and Paris. In the case of Paris, one of the attackers may have used a Syrian passport to cross by sea to Greece and enter Europe in the refugee/migrant flow of the past few months.

As a result, many in America have become more fearful for their safety. They have been expressing their concerns, especially in light of the recent White House decision to increase Syrian resettlement in the US by 10,000 for the current year.

Those of us involved in refugee resettlement are aware that the US admissions process is very different from what we have been seeing in Europe. This morning, an audience of more than 200 from throughout the St. Louis region learned the facts about how Syrians and others are thoroughly vetted prior to resettlement in America. They overwhelmingly expressed appreciation for the facts and continued support for the program.

This is how the US Program actually works: Refugees applying for admission to the US Program must have been duly registered with the United Nations and must be currently located in refugee camps or nearby in Turkey, Jordan, Lebanon and Egypt. Once refugee applicants are cleared for resettlement by the UN and referred to the US program for consideration and vetting, multiple security hurdles must be passed. The process takes at least 18 months. Also, contrary to footage of refugee flight in Europe, Syrians being resettled in the US are, by-and-large and will continue to be, families.

It is likely, and appropriate, that the Syrian resettlement process, including its already complex security procedures, is being reviewed by federal authorities. So, the American public can rest assured that appropriate protections will be in place. And in St. Louis, we stand ready to offer a welcoming resettlement community to refugees who pass our country's strict security checks.

America was founded to offer safe haven to refugees escaping persecution. We cannot imagine the horrors these people are fleeing. Their stories are not unlike the stories of many of our ancestors. Let's work with the federal government to address security issues. And let's continue to offer safe haven and thereby not forget who and what we are as a nation.
